erik_not_erik (<https://erik-not-erik.livejournal.com/>), sorry to bail on the park tomorrow.

Duty calls.

This looks like a good idea.

You'd miss my awesomely honed monkey vault for work? And my precisions are gonna hammer nails tomorrow. Who will gnash his teeth and seeth in envy and admiration if you're not there?

You could borrow somebody's kid.

"Hey, mind if I take your kid to the park and encourage her/him to jump off high shit?"

You know, that could totally work.

It's all in how you sell it. "Run her/him around until s/he's asleep standing up."

Oh, yeah. I know one of those.

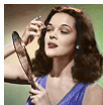

Want to do that tandem vault again that we got by accident last time, though. Totally like a movie. Get the hell back home so we can try that.

Are you taking me out for brunch before or after you corrupt the youth of America?

Hello? Right here.

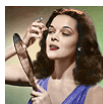

Well, right here at the day job, anyway.

They don't like me at the metal detector. Want me to send up cupcakes?

That was a straight line if I ever heard one.

Just phone when you hit the neighborhood, and if nothing is exploding, we'll go find all the food in the world. I'll need it by then, and I can do my job from a Crackberry as well as from the Sanctum.

When I was a (wayward? delinquent? troubled?) teenager, we built a half in the empty lot behind my house, out of all of the scrap wood we could find. Every now and then we would just tear off the top and make it taller. It was fabulous, and terribly dangerous, because we all thought we were Tony Hawk (Yes, I realize how badly I just dated myself there), and we didn't wear helmets. But none of our folks cared, because they all knew exactly where we were and what we were doing, and they were happy to risk head injuries if they knew we weren't doping up and having sex.

Which, of course, we weren't. Not. At. All.

See, I want to bring that kind of self-actualization to the next generation.

Besides, I wish I'd been doing this when I was thirteen, ~~instead of~~ in addition to kickflips. I also wish I'd been climbing then.

Heh. Why do you think that I am bitching so much? The bill for my body abuse came due about 5 years ago. Oddly enough, you can't just drop that one in the trash and avoid the bill collector. grin
